

Naturally @jenniferniven writing blew me away once again. I was underlining delicious lines left, right and centre.

Examples:

'Isn't it funny that they can't see I dropped dead a week ago?'

'The writing can save you.' ;,)

'Moonlight suits you, Captain.' Ooof.

I don't know why I still get surprised by how magical her writing is, even after reading her books countless times.

I'm so in love with her words, that characters who are frustratingly teenager-y, become loveable and real instead. That I started believing in a kind of outlandish plot, and wishing I could visit a tiny, ghost-filled island too. That I fell in love with a rather unbelievable love story, and now wish for a lovely, barefoot JC for myself.

I think this is the aces story young me needed to read and I'm really happy that it'll be out in the world next month (September 29!). It talks about the hard, but true and beautiful realities we face while growing up. Finding out that all this fiction started in Niven's reality made me weep a little harder at the end. What a wizard, vulnerable and important story to tell! Read it folks 📖
