

I reviewed the book, "Coast Watcher," by David Hill. Overall, I think the book was really interesting and used great descriptive vocabulary to paint interesting pictures as I read. My favourite part of the book was when Frank was hiding and trying to spy on the Japanese. I found this created a great feeling of suspense and excitement. I kept reading eagerly to see what would happen to Frank, as the bullets went flying past him - would he be ok?

David Hill had a great use of words, he created images that I was able to imagine in my head, which made the story even more interesting. I could feel the fear that Frank must have felt, and I felt like I was there.

I would definitely recommend people read this book! I think this book is aimed more at older children, aged from 10 years old upwards.
